

Early Journal Content on JSTOR, Free to Anyone in the World

This article is one of nearly 500,000 scholarly works digitized and made freely available to everyone in the world by JSTOR.

Known as the Early Journal Content, this set of works include research articles, news, letters, and other writings published in more than 200 of the oldest leading academic journals. The works date from the mid-seventeenth to the early twentieth centuries.

We encourage people to read and share the Early Journal Content openly and to tell others that this resource exists. People may post this content online or redistribute in any way for non-commercial purposes.

Read more about Early Journal Content at <http://about.jstor.org/participate-jstor/individuals/early-journal-content>.

JSTOR is a digital library of academic journals, books, and primary source objects. JSTOR helps people discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content through a powerful research and teaching platform, and preserves this content for future generations. JSTOR is part of ITHAKA, a not-for-profit organization that also includes Ithaka S+R and Portico. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org.

DANIEL S. RICHARDSON.

It is with the deepest regret that we record the death, at his home in Berkeley, on September 11, 1922, of Mr. Daniel S. Richardson, a member of this Society since March, 1894, and its Secretary and Treasurer from March, 1909, to the end of 1921. He had been in poor health for nearly a year, and, while in this condition had overtaxed his strength by his activities as a member of the Secretariat to the Japanese Delegation at the Washington Conference for the Limitation of Armaments last winter.

Born in Massachusetts nearly seventy-two years ago, he came to California with his parents when four year old, and had since then made this state his home. In his early manhood he was connected with the U. S. Embassy at the City of Mexico, and later was for many years Secretary of the San Francisco Post Office, and at one time Assistant Postmaster. He then became Foreign Secretary to the Japanese Consulate in San Francisco, a position he held at the time of his death. How greatly his services in that office were appreciated is evident from the fact that last December the Japanese Consul urged him to go to Washington notwithstanding his illness, saying that they wanted him at hand for consultation even if his illness should confine him to his room during the entire conference session.

His colleagues on the Board of Directors of the Astronomical Society of the Pacific were at least equally appreciative of Mr. Richardson's faithfulness, his wise counsel, and his unfailing optimism. When he had to give up his office last March, they made him, by unanimous vote, a Patron of the Society, in recognition of his great services.

Mr. Richardson was a good business man, but, in addition, he was a student, a writer of both prose and verse, a lover of nature and of art, and, above all, of his fellow men. A mutual friend writes: "He had many friends, as you can well appreciate. I have known him intimately for twenty-five years, and his death will be a loss to me." It is a loss, a heavy loss, to us all.

R. G. AITKEN.
